The present invention relates to optical communication systems and more particularly to an optical communication system and method of operation having novel features for permitting the communication of data or messages between remote points over a communications system, where the data transmission rate is at least two or more times the data bit frequency and includes the generation of a coded signal that is both spread spectrum and burst mode and also includes a novel receiver system and method of operation which permits high speed detection and demodulation of the coded signal. It is well known in the optical communications art that the demand for data communications is increasing and will continue to increase as the telecommunications industry expands to provide services that are desired by consumers. It is thus a prime objective to provide more efficient optical transmission systems which permit the high speed transmission of data over various forms of physical media and media, such as optical fibers, the optical transmission media. The present invention provides a novel system and method of operation for the transmission of data by the use of optical transmission lines. Typical of the optical communication systems that are presently being used is a system which uses optical carrier pulses that are modulated by a data signal at a low rate so as to transfer information over the optical transmission line. The communications system is comprised of an input terminal and an output terminal. At the input terminal, a data signal is modulated onto a low rate optical carrier signal, which signal is then coupled to an optical transmission line. At the output
